Bloomfield, P. J., Critelli, J. Y., Manor, J. M., Metayer, S. (2015). Community windshield assessment: Bluffton, SC. Unpublished raw data.

- A community windshield assessment of Bluffton, SC was completed through a colleague collaboration. The city was analyzed to identify the strengths of the community along with concerns and potential future problems. This research project provided relevant questions, answers, and inferences for further studies of the community. It also built partnerships with the city for future collaborations with the university.

Graduate Project

Spring 2022

Georgia Southern University

Manor, J. (2022). Increasing the Percentage of Vaccinations Amongst Residents and Employees in Nursing Homes Through a Nurse-Driven Protocol. Unpublished raw data.

- Vaccines have been identified as one of the most effective primary preventions in health promotion that protects us from infections and diseases. The vaccines that have been developed today have been through extensive testing and evaluation for safety and effectiveness. Often it is found to be more cost effective to be vaccinated than to treat the infection or disease. Immunocompromised and elderly residents have been found to be more at risk for complication of illnesses if contracted so it is very beneficial to be vaccinated. Unfortunately, the vaccination goals were not met over the last decade (ODPHP, 2021b). This creates a major health risk for the immunocompromised and elderly population in long-term care facilities. This project focused on the improvement of being vaccinated against COVID-19, Influenza, Pneumonia, and Shingles amongst residents and employees in a southeastern long-term care facility (LTCF) through a nurse-driven protocol.
